learn to do more with less

in a changing world, your business needs to be adaptable, agile and able to continually improve.

Learn how to do that — and more — with our Lean training curriculum. If you know you need Lean but don't know where to start, our introductory course is the perfect solution.

go lean — or risk getting left behind

We're witnessing the Fourth Industrial Revolution taking place all around us. Some businesses are thriving and growing, while others are struggling and failing. Those that are succeeding — including your competitors — tend to have one thing in common: They're Lean practitioners whose organizations are primed to adapt to changing markets, maximize employee engagement, minimize overproduction and rework and emphasize accountability.

But getting there organically is all but impossible. After all, that's a lot to accomplish internally while still making sure day-to-day operations continue. That's why Randstad created this introductory program — so businesses like yours can take the first steps in learning to adapt quickly without the headaches, hassles and obstacles you'll face when going it alone.

Perhaps there's a line in your facility that doesn't operate at peak efficiency. Or perhaps there's a process in place that always seems to be plagued with problems and breakdowns. Maybe there's a single department that's just out of step with the rest of your organization. These problems are common — but they can be solved by changing your way of working. That's where Randstad's Lean Way of Working program comes in. It's designed to arm your operational leaders and front-line managers with the framework they need to address challenges like these effectively and efficiently.
